The Availability section is open by default; it encompasses "Delivery Dates," "Assignment released to," "High Security," and "Time assignment" and part of "Submissions." This specification only discusses the Availability section; additional specifications will describe other three sections in more detail. This shows the Availability Section with default selections. A. Entire site has access, same availability By default, the assessment is available "to all and only site members" To give all site members the same availability dates and time limit, instructor fills in first row. If the instructor wants to add exceptions to the date and time limit, they may type a name of a group or individual beneath "Overriding exceptions to dates and time limit(s) above will be made for:" That heading, as well as the pulldown menu, is very specific in it's language so that users have a better sense that the pulldown is to limit availability and the exception field is just for making exceptions for dates and times, not availability

The instructor may also be explicit about how many minutes the Extra Time Group gets, rather than setting it as multiplier.

Note: this was done as just minutes, as opposed to hours and minutes, simply to conserve space. It was done as a text entry field, rather than a pulldown for minutes also to conserve space and also because having a single minute pulldown would make it longer.

Although this is entered as minutes, the confirmation screen, should interpret 180 minutes this as hours and minutes (i.e. 3 hours)

If user clicks "Save Settings and Publish" but has entered a non-valid entry into minutes field, a warning message should appear above

Some schools have stated that they wished to set up specific groups to always have a certain extension to their time limit. This spec does not specify how this would be set, but how this might present itself in the Settings.

There are a few ways this might be handled. The third, option 2b, is shown here.

1) steps 1-7 are automatic: that is, whenever a time limit has been set for the default, an exception row automatically appears with the Extra Time Group. That row may be deleted, or the time limit edited, but it appears by default

2a) steps 1-5 are eliminated. That is, users actively have to select Extra Time Group, but when they do, the pulldown is set to "of default x 1.5"

2b) same as 2a, but the preset extension is not editable (shown here).

2) Any exceptional settings will follow in blocks labeled 'Overrides for group "<name>" (<parameter> differs from default)'

Changes to both blocks include

- a) change "<assessment name> is available on <date> to you..." Do not identify the group these settings are associated with, as they could be sent to the student and the instructor may not want them to know that different groups have different settings
b) bold time limit, so it is easier to scan for differences between two blocks

It is clear how to send email to the Extra Time Group but developers will need to devise a way to send the first email to the whole class minus Extra Time Group. Similar issues exist for posting due date on appropriate Schedules.

G. When access limited, exceptions must be within limits Sections that meet on different days but share the same site might need different due dates for assignments. In this case, the instructor could have made just one exception for either Section 1 or 3, and handed the other dates and time limits above, but this method of adding both as exceptions is just as valid. (Note: This scenario of different dates and time limits for mutually exclusive sections also applies when assessment is available to all and only members of the site, but instructor would need to account for all sections or they would get default parameters)

 If the assessment is only available to selected groups, then only groups and individuals that are included in those groups can be matches.
 Thus if instructor types in "Section 2" it will be recognized as a group belonging to the site, but since it doesn't have access to this assessment, instructor see this message. The "Add more groups..." link is the same as above.

This shows what happens when there is essentially no default--that is, when there are exceptions covering the entire set of people this assessment is available to.

1) No "Default " block is listed

2) blocks for groups with overrides are simply called 'For "<group>" rather than 'Overrides for "<group>"

3) When an individual has overrides to one or more groups, there is no parenthetical note "differs from default" in the header because the individual is a member of a group that has an override, so he or she wouldn't be compared to the default. Instead, the groups the individual belongs to should be listed in parentheses.

If the instructor wants to offer this assessment anonymously, they select this in the first pulldown. the settings are then simplified tremendously, as there is no limiting by group, alternate times, or exceptions. And since anonymous attempts can't be saved, there is no option to submit saved attempts after the due date.

Additional specification to come

Adding the ability to have multiple availability parameters has implications beyond settings. SAM-1408 also describes

1) the Assessments home screen for instructors and students, the Begin Assessment screen.

2) It also describes what would happen if instructor attempts to link an assessment to a Gradebook item that another assessment is linked to.

However, additional screens not described in SAM-1408 also be specified.

3) Calendar screens: The confirmation message also appears as the description of the event that is added for the due date. These will need to vary by exception and need to be kept updated.

4) if there are groups that get automatic time limit extension, such time limit extensions need to be defined somewhere. Stanford will leave this spec to someone else.
